

B1+ Reading Comprehension Worksheet (LEVEL 2)

Text: The Internship That Was Not What It Seemed

When Jonas finished school, he was happy to start an internship at a marketing company in Berlin. He had always been interested in media, advertising, and social media trends, so he expected an exciting and creative work environment. During the first week, everything looked promising. His colleagues were friendly, and he was given small tasks such as designing simple posts and organizing files.

However, after a few weeks, Jonas noticed that most of his work was repetitive and not very creative. He spent a lot of time sorting emails, entering data into spreadsheets, and preparing documents for meetings. He rarely got the chance to participate in real marketing projects.

Jonas decided to speak with his supervisor. He explained that he wanted to learn more about strategy, content creation, and campaign planning. His supervisor listened carefully and admitted that the company had not structured the internship well. She offered him more responsibility and included him in a small social media campaign for a new product.

Slowly, Jonas began to enjoy his internship again. He worked with a small team to create posts, analyze engagement statistics, and plan advertising ideas. He realized that marketing is not only about creativity but also about organization and data analysis.

At the end of the internship, Jonas felt that he had learned a lot more than he expected. Even though the beginning was disappointing, the experience helped him understand what kind of job he wanted in the future.
